Excerpt: . . . during the year, and in that number was the one girl whose parents are not members of the church. During the vacation, or since the close of the school year, two more of the boarders were received into full membership. Intimately connected with the Normal School is the educational work in the outstations. Girls who have taken a partial course in the institution are doing effective work in a number of towns in different parts of the field. These schools are beginning to act as feeders to the training-school, and this influence promises to be felt more and more each year. Places in the institution are now eagerly sought for by the most intelligent of our Christian people. The difficulty, says the report, is to put off those we cannot take; not to find girls to fill up our number. The day-schools enable us, first, to select with greater care candidates for admission to the Normal School; second, to extend its benefits to a larger number of girls; and third, to do so at a relatively smaller cost, as the girls come into the Normal School fitted to enter a higher grade than where they come without previous training. The report adds, Would that we were similarly situated with reference to the training of male teachers and candidates for the ministry. In this particular we are terribly handicapped. We have no capable Christian male teachers, or next to none. There seems to be a need of...
