Not illustrated. 1762 Excerpt: .for the town of Boffiney in Cornwall, in the parliament held the twentyseventh of queen Elizabeth, and afterwards for Plymouth in Devonshire, in the thirty, sifth of the famereign. Having hitherto spoken of his public actions, we shall now fay something of his person and character. He was low of stature, but well set, had a broad open chest, his eyes large and clear, of a fair complexion, with a fresh chearsul and ngaging countenance: as navigation had been been his whole study, he was a persect master in every branch of it, especially astronomy, and the application of it to the nautical art. His voyage round the world is an incontestable proof of his courage, capacity, patience, and public spirit; since he performed every thing that could be expected from a man, who preferred the honour and prosit of his country to his own private advantage: and it is apparent, that if Sir Francis Drake amassed a large fortune by continually exposing himself to labours and perils, which hardly any other man would have undergone, for the fake even of the greatest expectations, he was far from being governed by a narrow and private spirit: on the contrary, his notions were free and noble; and the nation stands indebted to him for many advantages which Hie at present enjoys, in arms, navigation, and commerce. It was the selicity of our admiral to live in the time of a princess, who always took care to distinguish...
