Options to Expand the Occupation Force Beyond the Base Case Using Existing Forces If DoD chose to use more of its currently available forces to occupy Iraq in addi-tion to active Army combat brigades, it could sustain a larger occupation force over the long term. CBO analyzed the effects of various options to employ exist-ing forces from the active Army, the Army National Guard, or the Marine Corps. DoD could choose to implement any combination of those options along with the base case. If it implemented all of them, the U. S. military could sustain an occu-b b pation of 67, 000 to 106, 000 personnel in Iraq - equivalent to 6 to 10 combat brigades - at a cost of 14 billion to 19 billion annually. Eliminate the Requirement for Army Rapid-Reaction Forces. In this option, the Army would no longer retain its dedicated rapid-reaction forces - units that the service tries to keep available, at a high standard of readiness, to respond to any new contingencies that may develop. Those forces include a brigade of the 82nd Airborne Division (called the Division...
