The morning rose bright and clear, only a filmy haze was just now gathering, that threateud to obscure its clearness, and gave to Natures surroundings a slight tinge of melancholy sadness, inclining pensive minds to a little serious reflection; just the beginning for one of those dreamy days when we feel like retrospecting the past. Nora had risen while the stars were yet visible; for she had always liked to observe the starlight going out gradually in the morning twilight, and the day stealing in apace. First, we see the dim outlines of distant objects; then they grow more distinct, marked on the blue, ethereal sky, until the broad glare of the god of day shows Nature in all her gorgeous coloring of beauty. Nora was leaning on the railing of the balcony, watching the receding stars, as they...
