Excerpt: . . . from an all-out attack to a war of observation (peace-keeping), for instance, but each will have all of these elements present to one degree or another. By contrast, the subjective nature of war encompasses those elements - such as military forces, their doctrines, weapons, as well as the environments (land, sea, air, and danger) in which they fight - that make each war unique. One way to grasp this construct is to think of objective elements as internal and subjective ones as external. Maritime conflicts, for instance, appear different externally from wars on land, but are nonetheless similar with respect to their internal characteristics. Even the same conflict can change its appearance over time as different combatants enter or leave the fight, or introduce new weapons, tactics, and techniques into the fray, as in the Thirty Years War. Interestingly, under Clausewitzs concept, the objective and subjective natures of war are closely connected...
