Excerpt: .running it drives the generator in the usual manner and the motor and gear reduction are at rest, there being no contact or friction in the clutch when the electric motor is standing still. On the other hand, when the gasoline engine is at rest and the electric motor is started, the clutch immediately engages and the electric motor starts the engine through the medium of the drive which ordinarily, runs the generator. Both the motor and the generator have the highest possible efficiency. The generator is designed to deliver a charging current at low speed and the motor to have a very high initial and running torque. The gear reduction is claimed to be the most efficient type possible. In starting it is not necessary to engage any gears or do anything other than turn the current into the starting motor. When the engine is...
